NINTH YEAR

The New Century.

The Twentieth Century is the only one that any of us will have the pleasure of seeing ushered into existence. While the earth still rolls around the same sun as from the beginning, and the "Man in the Moon" is the same as when the oldest were children, there is a seeming newness to these first days of January, and the thought that we are now entering a brand new century, with its abundant possibilities and openings, should spur us to make a determined effort and reach out for unlimited success.

To attempt to describe the conditions of the poultry world 100 years ago, or to prophesy what they will be 100 years hence, would be of no real value to any one. It will make but little difference to any of us financially in the year 2000, whether hens hatch and rear stronger chickens than an incubator and brooder, whether the Wyandottes are a better general purpose fowl than Plymouth Rocks, whether the shows are best judged by score card or comparison, or whether it pays to advertise or not. We shall then have passed to the great beyond and the affairs of this world will be in other hands. All of these do make a difference to the poultry fanciers of to-day and should interest them enough to bring their influence to bear where it is most needed to settle these, as well as other important questions, in the best and fairest way.

While we believe in people reading up any subject that they may be interested in, at the same time one must do his own thinking, use his own eyes and ears, to learn things practically. An active, inquisitive mind will acquire things by observation and close discrimination that would be impossible to get from books or papers.

One thing is certain, and that is, the same elements that have been requisites for success in the nineteenth century will assist us to that end in the twentieth. The unfortunate will continue to wait for luck to come their way, while the fortunate will be those who seek for it until they find it. Success is invariably the result of a determined effort in some particular line, coupled with plenty of grit (not chicken grit) and hard work.

There never was a more favorable time in the history of the world for a man or a woman to excel in any calling. It is true that the professions are crowded and the markets overstocked, but the demand is still brisk for the best of everything. The market stalls will always make room to display and sell any product better than the average. "There is plenty of room at the top," and those who possess a willingness to dare and do all that is required of them will get there.

This disposition to labor for desired results is often mistaken for genius; many never discover this mistake until too late, because they will not pay the price for learning it.

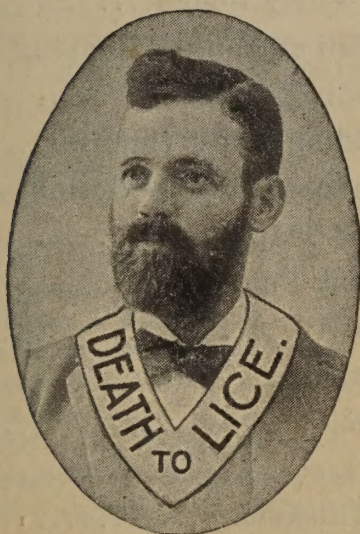

Theories often look fine on paper. New ones come and go with each successive season, only to vanish in thin air, while facts alone remain.

Sometimes we do not stop to think that even a stove has a more important duty to perform than simply to consume fuel. Hens to be kept profitably must fill the egg basket as well as their crops, and every mother's son or daughter should have a higher purpose in life than merely gaining a livelihood. If the world owes us a living, we owe the world all that we can do to make it better. If our light goes out, without, as Longfellow said, leaving "Footsteps on the sands of time," we are neglecting a duty and even a privilege that is demanded of us, no matter what our position or influence.

INTRODUCTORY.

AFTER issuing this book for eight consecutive years, it would seem hardly necessary to now introduce myself or this, my ninth annual edition of Pointers.

I have endeavored in this issue to give my readers something more worthy of their perusal than ever before. The principal article, "Why Many fail at Poultry Keeping," is written by the well-known writer and friend of poultry culture, Kate Sanborn of Breezy Meadows. This, you will find interesting, amusing and instructive.

I have induced Mr. C. A. Browning, my business manager, himself a fancier, to contribute his views on "The Importance of Shape," which he presents in such a manner that I heartily agree with him.

I am still in the poultry business, as you will see by my description of "Plymouth Rock Poultry Farm." This branch is in charge of a competent poultry man, who looks after my birds in every detail. While we did not rear quite so many chicks as usual last season, there was a greater per cent. of first-class birds than ever before.

Of course this book is sent out principally to stimulate the trade of Death to Lice Remedies. At the same time, I have a deep sympathy with poultry keepers, and would be more than pleased to learn that this little book was of benefit to any one, whether a customer of mine or not.

My Death to Lice Remedies are doing good work and giving excellent satisfaction. We have recently added a liquid preparation to our list, so as to be in a position to meet the demand for a lice killer in any form. Our trade, the past season, taxed our capacity to the utmost and we now expect to soon enlarge our plant so as to continue to fill all orders promptly.

According to my usual custom, I have also included advertisements of some of the best of the Poultry Publications, Incubators, Poultry Foods, Supplies, Fixtures, and also breeders of the different varieties, all of which are worthy of your liberal patronage.

This book is mailed free anywhere. If you have friends interested in poultry culture send me their names and post office addresses, and I will mail one to each. Should you receive more than one copy, please pass it along to your neighbor.

Yours with best wishes,

D. J. LAMBERT,

ILLUSTRATED POULTRY BOOKS!

SUCCESS WITH POULTRY.

Is a book of ninety-six pages, 9x12 inches in size, that contains, we fully believe, MORE AND BETTER practical, reliable information on the general subject of POULTRY FOR PROFIT than any other book published. Gives the cream of established facts. Written and compiled by the Editor of the RELIABLE POULTRY JOURNAL, who has given seven years of careful study to the Poultry business.

.....Price, $1.00.

ARTIFICIAL INCUBATING AND BROODING.

It is the greatest, because it is the most up-to-date, the most practical, the best illustrated, and is contributed to by the most expert authorities in the world. This book contains 140 pages, 12x9 inches in size, with over 100 illustrations, among the number being EIGHT FULL-PAGE COPYRIGHTED DESIGNS of modern Brooder Houses, Laying Houses and Incubator Cellars. It contains full and complete instructions on the use and abuse of Incubators. It tells how to start right in hatching and raising Chickens by artificial means.

.....Price, 50c.

BARRED, WHITE AND BUFF PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

This book was issued from the presses April, 1899. It consists of 80 pages, 9x12 inches in size and a handsome cover. It contains an elegant colored plate of a pair of Barred Plymouth Rocks, shown in their natural colors, reproduced from an oil painting made by the world's greatest poultry artist, Franklane L. Sewell. Among the contributors of original and copyrighted articles treating on the Barred Rocks are the following: A. C. Hawkins, E. B. Thompson, Bradley Bros., William Ellery Bright, C. H. Latham, F. W. Richardson, Theo. Hewes, F. W. Hitchcock, W. S. Russell, C. A. Emery, S. S. Noble, and others. Every line in the book written by a well-known breeder.

.....Price, 50c.

RELIABLE POULTRY REMEDIES.

Consists of 64 pages, 5x6 inches in size, points out the causes, describes the symptoms and gives tried remedies for Roup, Colds, Cholera, Canker, Indigestion, Constipation, Dysentery, Congestion of Liver, Gapes, Chicken Pox, Black Rot, Crop-bound, Scaly Legs, Bumble-foot and many other common diseases of Fowls. It also contains valuable instruction on the proper care of Poultry in order to prevent diseases. It is a book that will save you dollars.

.....Price, 25c.

THE WYANDOTTES — Silver, Golden, White and Buff.

Now in preparation, will consist of from 50 to 80 pages, and will be the most complete publication ever issued on this popular breed.

.....Price, 50c.

THE BANTAM FOWL.

This book has just been issued, and is the first complete and fully illustrated Bantam book ever published in this country. The editor, Mr. T. F. McGrew, judge and breeder, of New York City, has spent many months of time collecting and writing the matter for it, and over sixty original copyrighted illustrations have been made expressly for this book. Any person who is interested in Bantams, either as pets or for profit, will want a copy of "The Bantam Fowl."

.....Price, 50c.

POULTRY HOUSES AND FIXTURES.

Consists of 32 large pages, 9x12 inches, and contains the latest designs of practical Poultry Building for the city lot, the village acre and the farm; also complete and convenient houses for the Fancier, plans and buildings for extensive Poultry Farms.

.....Price, 25c.

These Books are sold ON APPROVAL. If not satisfactory, they can be immediately returned in good order, and the purchase money will be promptly refunded. The above prices include payment of postage to any address in the United States or Canada.

• Why many Fail at Poultry Keeping

When Mr. Lambert asked me to furnish the leading article in his "Pocket Book Pointers" for the first year of the new Century, I felt as I suppose a young lady does when asked to christen a battle ship or recite an original poem at the opening of an Exposition, for it was certainly a great compliment.

Then the sober second thought brought humility ; he perhaps selected me because as a beginner I made nearly all the mistakes possible, but one does love to talk of one's own experiences, even if they show a lamentable degree of ignorance.

I have always had a fancy for keeping hens and caring for them, and remember distinctly an old timer named "Brownie" and a pet bantam cock called "Dandy Dick." I recall the temporary illness of the latter bird and my treatment, which, proving successful, I chronicled in doggerel:

"Dandy Dick was very sick;
We fed him with pepper,
And then he got better."

As I recollect our hens in my early home, I can see them coming up to the kitchen door for refuse from the table, looking fat and comfortable, and I know they gave us enough eggs for our table and cooking, and just lived in and under the barn and thrived. That was the happy time when hens were only a comfort and not a source of constant anxiety and expense. Nowadays successful poultry keeping is an art with a big, big A. It is no longer an amusement or a fad, but must be studied as one studies anything worth the doing. The lack of this preparatory knowledge is the first mistake. When a young man has a little money left him or saved up and is either too lazy or too wise to try a farmer's life, he often builds an expensive henhouse (building it all wrong),

"Profitable Poultry Keeping

In all Its Branches."

THIS is the title of the new and elegant Catalogue issued by the Cyphers Incubator Co. for 1901. It contains 192 pages, 8x12 inches in size, over 200 fine new half-tone illustrations and a wealth of interesting, down-to-date matter, covering the subject of

in all branches.

THIS IS A BRAND NEW BOOK, not a re-hash of old ones. It contains special articles written by experts, and illustrates and describes over fifty of America's largest and most successful Duck, Broiler, Roaster and Egg Farms. It also contains the endorsements of over one hundred of the foremost breeders of this country—men and women who are using the Cyphers Incubators—and shows Photographic Views of many of their Poultry Plants and Favorite Poultry Houses.

THIS BOOK WEIGHS A POUND AND A QUARTER!! The cost to mail it is exactly 10 cents. The book itself is free to you, provided you will pay the postage. We count this book worth $2 or $3 of any person's money who is really interested in making money out of poultry. We have crowded into it every item of value possible to make it worth several dollars to you.

Of course it contains (additional to all of the above) a fully illustrated description and explanation of the Cyphers Latest Improved, Non-Moisture, Self-Ventilating, Self-Regulating Incubators and the Cyphers Double and Triple Apartment Safety Brooders; also the full line of Poultry Appliances we manufacture.

starts in on a grand scale, and in a few years gives it up as a bad job, and later you see the place utilized as a greenhouse, or perhaps left neglected to get lop-sided and half tumble down. There are two such wrecks near me, monuments to a mistake. I have many letters from single women and impecunious widows asking if the hen business really pays. One widow writes: "I have lost my husband and am in poor health; have five hundred a year to live on; I suffer from nervous headaches, and have three children to clothe and educate; would be obliged to keep a man to do the work. Have been advised to build a hen house and keep enough hens to support me; would you think this a good plan?" What would you have told her Mr. or Mrs. or Miss Beginner?

From the depths of my tragical experience I wrote as follows :

"Dear Madam : A good man's wages and board would take one-half of your income. The proper sort of hen house would eat up the other half. Your hens, children and self seem to be excluded." Beginners don't like me because I dare to tell the whole truth.

There is every variety of beginner from the enterprising farmer's daughter who keeps fifty fowls to help her buy a few extras, to the daring schemer who is now starting a mammoth plant in New Jersey intending to supply most of New York city with eggs and poultry, anticipating I believe 100,000 eggs per day. And I am so discouraging and conservative as to think the farmer's daughter has the best of it. The other is too much like Col. Sellers' hope for a colossal fortune from his Oriental Optical Eye Liniment. So many millions of people with weak eyes and a bottle for each eye. How then shall we start in a sensible way? Just exactly opposite to my method at first. I built or ordered built a hen house large enough for 150 fowls; then visited poultry shows and purchased 5 hens and a cockerel of all the varieties I fell in love with. And how handsome they did look when in their separate runs: the showy Black Langshans; then the comfortable Buff Cochins; next the dainty White Wyandotte; the Spangled Hamburg followed; after them the waddling, feathered legged, Light Brahma; and I must not forget the Royal Game Bantams at the end of the row. That spunky little cock did not allow himself to be forgotten. He would fly over the netting which was not sufficiently high, and 'pon my word he could whip, yes and wound, every other cock of the whole collection. He behaved so outrageously that at last I was forced to send him to a bantam lover in another state who gave me four fine Plymouth Rocks in exchange.

When obliged to leave home for a winter in California, my caretakers took care to mix all these splendid birds in a hopeless crowd, resulting in a lot of queer crosses and mongrels. The gallant Roosters, Mormons that they are, persisted in exchanging visits over the fences for flirtations or fights; their manners rivalling in brutal rudeness the champion foot-ball teams.

Now stop and think, and avoid these big mistakes.

Begin in a modest way with a few fine fowls of one kind.

Then think again. What do you want to do? Keep hens for pleasure or a necessary profit?

Do you wish to make a specialty of eggs or two pound broilers or roasters? Are you near a town or city where you can dispose of these at the best prices?

If not, stop at once, for you can do nothing but lose, and the better your birds the greater your loss and discouragement. Who would start a bakery in a desert?

For instance, Metcalf, Mass., is nowhere in particular; 10 miles from a market, nearly 30 miles from a city. That obliges one to invest in egg boxes, pay express charges, and compete with many who are better placed.

The head of one of the best markets in Boston tells me that my fowls are too good; that he never saw better, and they are worth 30 cents a pound. "But—but—western competition, madam, and the frozen stock prevent our giving a proper price."

Few are willing to pay proper prices, yet very willing and ready to complain "that the average fowls in market are improperly dressed and unattractive in appearance."

I have sold broilers to a swell club steward, and that means a fair knowledge of what is demanded. O, what care must be taken to be acceptable. If a dozen were ordered, they must be of uniform size and weight, with yellow legs, plump breasts, and tender as a maiden's dream of her first lover! They must be stuck scientifically, and dry picked with rapidity while warm, dressed as that special patron prefers, and then the profits are moderate, when at too great a distance.

My next mistake was in a simple reliance upon my hired man to keep the houses clean. Like the boy of the conundrum he "lied" when questioned, and at last, when driven to own a disgusting condition of filth and vermin, he said, "Well, I'll be darned if I am willing to shovel out hen manure every day; I like to see hens in their place, but all this fussing—no use in it I say!" I judged that his only idea of the place for hens was roasted, on the table, by the way he devoured them.

Keeping hens and henhouses clean is a hard, dirty, never ending job; hens have a genius for befouling everything, tipping over food, stepping into water, soiling and spoiling.

Are you willing to endure all these unpleasant habits and fight against dirt and disease eternally? Then you can make hens pay.

Are you prepared to be cheerful and philosophic and not lose courage when, after getting out 200 yellow fluffy chicks the skunks and cats and minks and weasles, and hawks and gapes, and a dozen diseases carry off more than half to begin with? If you invest in an incubator, a majority of the first lot of eggs will either be baked or get cool. At least that is the general history. But persevere and you will win.

I mistrust the good sense of a person who erects a fancy Chinese Pagoda affair for his or her fowls with two stories and lots of glass. Now how would you build a model home for a hundred hens? Would you have one or three houses? Do you prefer a board floor or the earth and why? Do you know the best method of ventilation? Should it be from above or below and why? How face? What kind of land do you prefer? Would you raise the buildings from the ground and why?

Do you realize the unspeakable benefit of a number of scratching sheds, and how would you construct them? Can you have running water carried into every house? If not, are you not afraid that many of the hens will suffer from thirst in summer? Have you studied carefully the great subject of intelligent, satisfactory, healthful feeding? Or do you think that all that is necessary is to throw out a little of this and some more of that?

PRACTICAL POULTRYMAN,
Dept. A. - Whitney Point, N. Y.

I consider the four cardinal points in my care of hens to be cleanliness, proper temperature in houses, the right amount and kind of food, and a real personal interest in each chick that chips the shell.

Cleanliness forbids vermin, otherwise they are almost impossible to be exterminated. But we must never despair, never give up. They can be downed. Mr. Lambert, who has a national reputation as a poultry breeder, a righteous judge at poultry shows, and a writer of helpful hints, has given us (you all know what), which is all we need to clear out the undesirable insect: Yes, D. to L. Due to Lambert or is it Destruction to the Louse? That is as important a discovery as many more valued by those who do not keep poultry, for we realize that the business hen contributes largely to the wealth of a state, and she can't amount to much when covered with lice.

Robert Burns wrote one of his most famous poems to "A Louse," which he saw on a lady's bonnet at church, and he seems to have longed for exactly what Mr. Lambert has provided.

After watching it till it arrived at "the vera tapmast, towering height," he cried out :

"O for some rank mercurial rozet
Or fell, red smeddum,
I'd give you sic a hearty dose'ot,
Wad dress your droddum.

Smeddum was a dust or powder.

Now, thanks to Mr. Lambert no one need long in vain, and negligence is not excusable. Ignorance and negligence are the twin causes of failure, and no need of either. And now for a rosier side to poultry keeping. After 12 years of testing everything on a farm to see what was the most profitable—from a superb Holstein Herd to raising Canaries and Yorkshire Terriers (having only omitted Belgian Hares and Skunks), I have decided that Hens and Hay are my best "holt." And if I, who live afar from markets and men, can make poultry pay and PAY WELL, others can do very much better. To prove that I am not preaching without arduous practice, I am proud to say that there is not one thing but killing a fowl that I have not attended to personally, and not one day passes that I do not pay a visit to each house on the place.

In fact I have studied hens so carefully that now when I meet a new woman, I unconsciously classify her in my mind as a light or dark Brahma, a White Wyandotte, a Buff Cochin, or if she's slim and wiry I say she's a Leghorn, which you know is the Shad of the Poultry-yard—mostly bones.

Now let's recapitulate, in set rules :

Select wise location.

Be willing to work hard.

Begin small.

Have but one kind, allow no mongrels.

Give plenty of green food and ground bones in winter.

Provide scratching sheds and make the flock hunt in leaves or chaff for scattered grain.

Hens must be interested in something and have some daily exercise or they will grow mopy, and over-fat, and a fat hen forgets to lay.

Don't bother to try to save a really sick chicken or a diseased hen.

Advertise if you expect to sell much or be known.

Take at least one good Poultry Magazine; also write for it.

Keep strict accounts; know every month what you have spent and made.

Have such extra stock that your cockerels will bring good prices as breeders.

Be on the alert for more information about your specialty.

Give water slightly warm in winter; too cold produces a chill; too hot a reaction.

Don't buy fowls at a poultry show; they are not so safe as others.

Be generous with cabbages and coarse grit.

Use Death to Lice and whitewash frequently.

The dark barred Plymouth Rock is the hen for me.

And now good bye and jolly good luck to each and all.

Remember that a full egg basket helps to fill the dinner-pail and your own pocket book; that's the kind of "Pocket Book Pointer" you all want.

A Good Breeding House.

For the past two years we described and illustrated our large poultry house for layers. Omitting these plans in this issue, we present cuts and particulars of the best house we have to accommodate breeders.

As we usually mate but 12 to 15 females to a male for breeding, a roosting room 8 feet by 8 feet is of sufficient size, while the annexed shed should not be smaller than 8 x 12, and as much larger as your space and inclinations will allow.

The height of the roosting room is 8 feet at peak, so that a person of ordinary height can stand upright while inspecting the fowls when on the roosts or cleaning off the dropping boards. The front is about 6 feet high above sills and the rear 4 feet, which will give sufficient pitch to roof.

The interior fixtures of these roosting houses are simply the dropping boards in the rear, a box for grit, and the nest boxes. The dropping boards are 2 feet 5 inches wide and 16 inches above the sills; 6 inches above these are the roosts of 2 x 3 spruce, corners well rounded and fastened at a sufficient distance from the back of building to prevent injury to the tails of the birds.

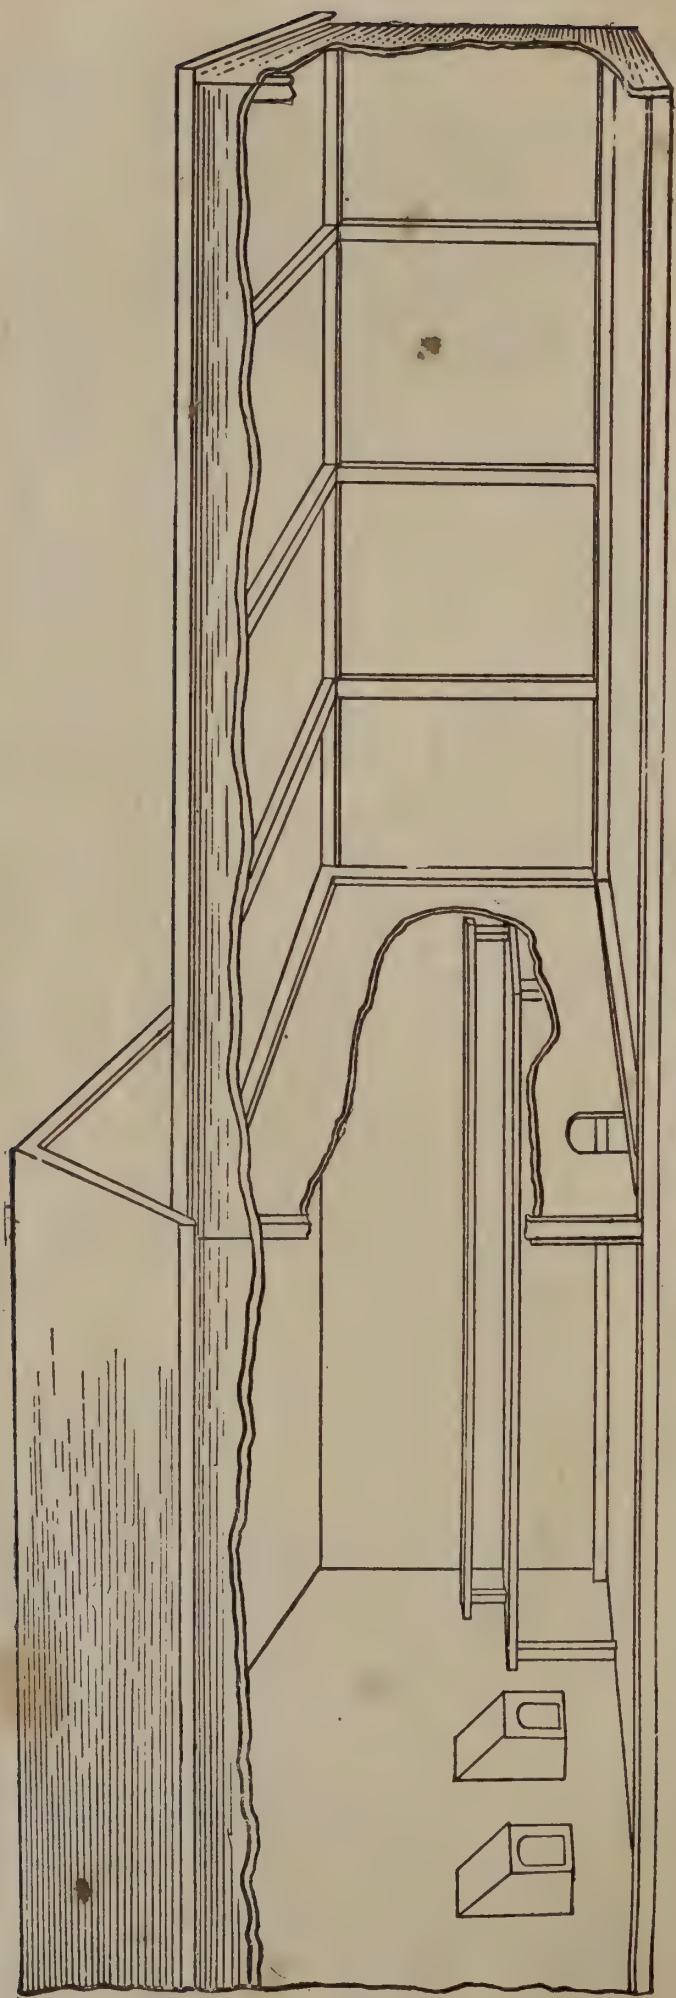

The scratching sheds provide a cosier shelter in winter, when not over 6 feet high in front and 2 feet at the back, but some that are 8 feet front and 4 feet back, 8 feet wide, are more conveniently cleaned and are very satisfactory.

The curtains are of muslin stretched on 1 x 2 spruce frames, and are hung on hinges at top of shed. They ought not to come down quite to the top of the leaves. Where there are no enclosed runs, the wire netting must be far enough above the ground to prevent the male birds from fighting through it. These curtains are rarely kept down in the day time except to keep out rain or snow, as we prefer to keep our birds warm by making them work. Houses and sheds are both covered with either Swan's or Bird's Roofing Papers, which are giving good satisfaction.

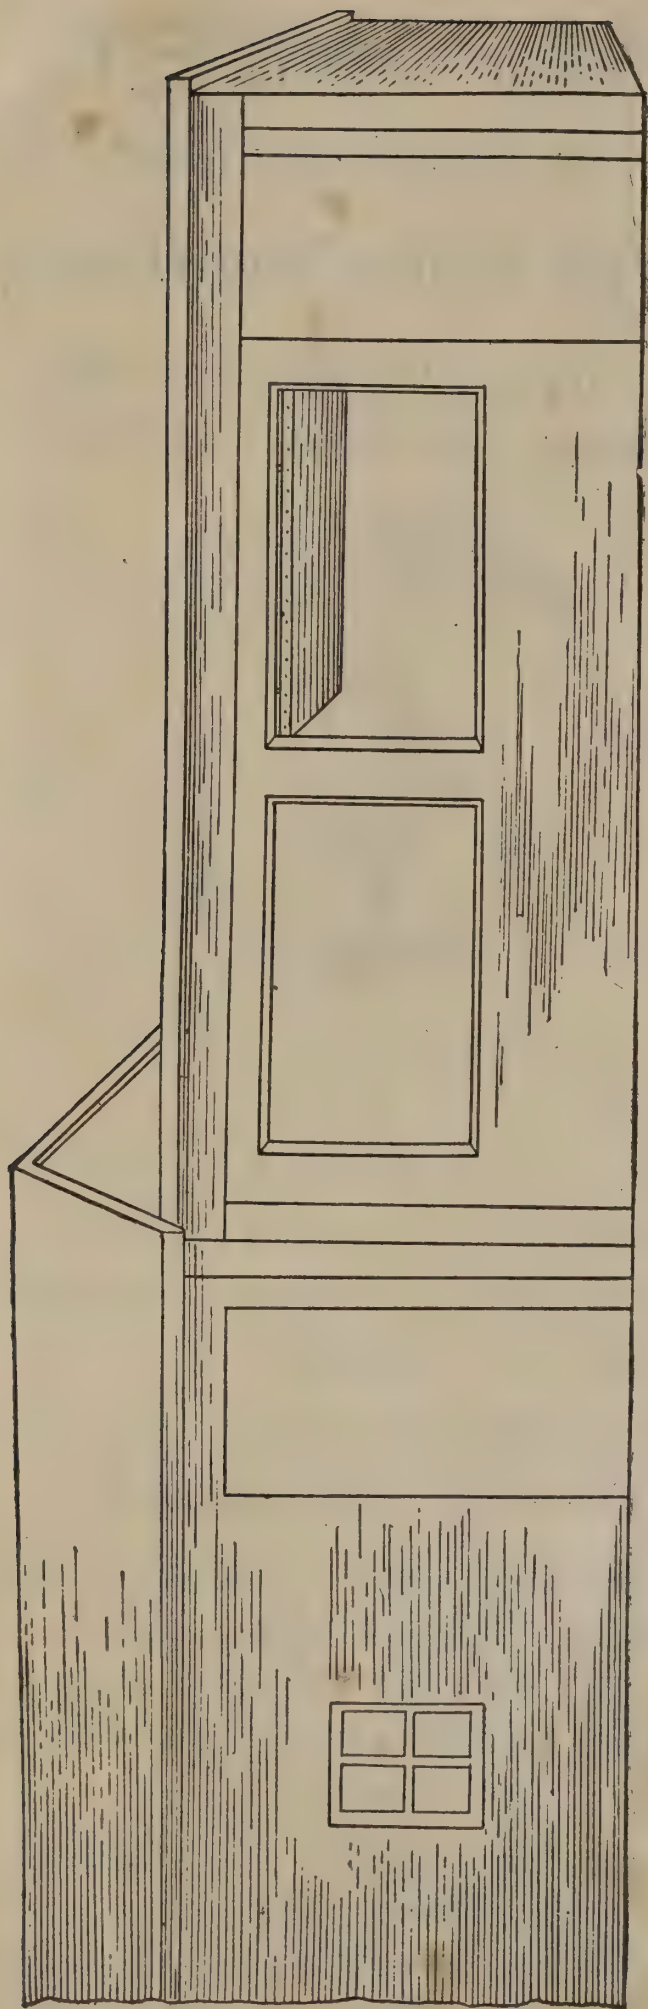

The sheds are kept supplied with dry leaves to induce scratching, and all dry feed is thrown in this litter so that the birds get sufficient exercise, even in inclement weather.

During the winter or early spring months, when weather permits, each mating is given its liberty a part of each day, when they can roam about at will and secure sufficient green food. When confined, this latter adjunct is supplied in the form of sugar beets, cabbages, apples, onions, &c., which are given to them three or four times a week. We also give them cut clover in the daily mash.

The first feed is composed of H. O. or American Poultry Food, shorts, cut clover and meat scraps. The water, clover and scraps are put in the kettle at the same time. The water is brought to a boil and then the grain is stirred in. This mixture is made crumbly, all the meal being used that the water will moisten. The kettle is then covered up and the mash will keep warm all night and be just at the right temperature to feed in the early morning. This mash is fed as soon as the birds come off their roosts. The fowls must not be allowed to fill themselves on the mash, but must be hungry enough to go right to scratching for grain in the litter after cleaning up the mash given them.

Between 10 and 11 a.m. we scatter a very little grain in the litter in each scratching shed. There will usually be enough grain in the litter left over from the day before to keep the hens busy up to this time. About two hours before roosting time we throw in the litter, if the birds are confined, or in the grass, if they are at liberty, all the grain they will clean up.

Our birds are made to work and work hard in a deep litter or heavy grass for all the grain they get. The grain fed is H. O. scratching feed, wheat, hulled oats, and sometimes cracked corn or oats to the hens, while to the pullets, until matured, we also give some whole corn. On every pleasant day during the year our birds are allowed to go out, providing there is no snow on the ground. About once a week we give them charcoal in the mash. We do not approve of any cast iron rule for amount of food to give any certain number of birds. I do not believe the man who feeds my poultry could tell you how much to give any certain number of birds, and yet he can feed correctly every pen on the place. In other words, you must study your birds and know from their actions about how much they will need. A fowl's appetite will vary just the same as that of a human being.

IMPORTANCE OF SHAPE.

Typical carriage is perfect shape in each section by the scale of points in the American Standard of Perfection, forming the ideal shape of a breed of fowls and giving to them a style of carriage or type peculiarly their own, by which they may be readily recognized.

This is the most distinguishing feature of a breed and it does not receive the attention from Judges and Breeders that it deserves. If it did, we would see more birds nearer to the true type than we do.

Where the types of two breeds approach one another as closely as in the Wyandottes and Plymouth Rocks, you might show the average White or Buff Wyandottes, if they had single combs (which they sometimes do) for White or Buff Plymouth Rocks, and few there are who would be able to detect the difference. This should not be so. A breed of fowls is supposed to have a type distinctly its own and any great departure from this should make a bird worthless as a breeder.

That the Cochin breeders have taken the lead in this matter can easily be seen. If you will examine the Standard you will find nearly three pages describing "Cochin Shape." This is one page more than is devoted to any other breed. The improvement resulting from the attention given to shape can most readily be seen in the Partridge Cochins. This variety especially has made rapid strides in shape in the last few years.

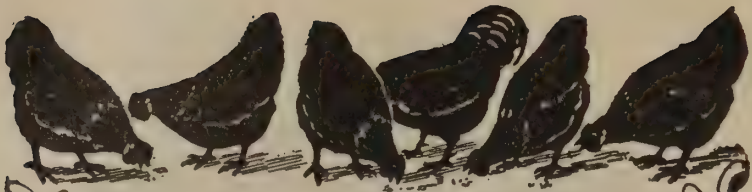

The effects of fads, or hobbies in color, when carried to extremes, are nearly, if not always, detrimental to the beauty as well as to the practical value of a fowl. You might ride "Typical carriage" for a hobby horse, as hard as you please, yet I doubt if it would result harmfully to any breed.

The Specialty Clubs can do a great deal to help the work along. It should be the ambition of all Fanciers and Breeders to get their fowls as near to the ideal shape as possible, for there is nothing that increases the value of a flock so much. This could best be attained by individual matings, selecting the very best male and female of typical shape, which, if kept up for several generations, would, I feel quite sure, result in great improvement.

If you are raising pure bred fowls, just stop and think how much better a bird of typical shape looks, and really is, than an ill-shaped specimen. If you do not mate individually to make this one of the strong points of your strain, I think you will be careful, at least, to have good-shaped males at the head of your breeding pens.

If you are a prospective poultryman and intend to start with pure-bred stock, get them as near as possible to the true type of the breed you select and you will never regret it.

PLYMOUTH ROCK POULTRY FARM.

The location of a poultry plant plays a most important part in the raising of poultry. I know of poultry farms, managed by as competent men as are in the business, where it is impossible to raise show birds, on account of lack of certain necessities of nature for raising birds of merit.

I looked over the larger part of Rhode Island for five years before I found a place that suited me. Six years ago I bought the 12 acre farm where I now make my home and have since then, and do now, conduct my poultry business, which is increasing yearly.

We are within three quarters of a mile of Cowesett R. R. station on the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., eleven miles south of Providence, and within one quarter of a mile of the Providence and East Greenwich electric car line.

The farm is hilly, with plenty of southern exposure and many ideal spots for poultry houses. There is running spring water the entire year in various parts of the farm. Soft green grass is abundant nearly every month in the year and there is also no lack of shade and sheltered places.

Our growing chickens are always given free range and are placed in bunches of about one hundred in spots the best adapted by nature to their needs.

The poultry buildings, while inexpensive, are as suitable for poultry breeding, as any I ever saw.

We keep but one variety, Barred Plymouth Rocks, so that there is no danger of crossing or mixing of breeds. We can frequently let three or four pens, in different parts of the farm, have their liberty at the same time, without any chance of their getting together. This free range is one of our methods for insuring fertile eggs and strong healthy chickens.

We usually raise from five to seven hundred chickens annually, and winter between four and five hundred, including the birds of former years' hatches.

The culls are sold for market purposes as soon as they are old enough, while the best are reserved for breeders and to supply the demand for exhibition and breeding stock.

I have bred Barred Plymouth Rocks almost continuously since 1878. Other varieties, as they came to notice, I have tried, but I always made this variety my specialty.

To provide a food that will properly develop bone, muscle, tissue and feathers has been our aim, and the poultry keeper will find in American Poultry Food an article that meets every requirement. It will produce more pounds of flesh, or a greater number of eggs, in less time and at less expense, than any other feed.

It produces quick growth, cockerels are ready for service younger, and pullets lay sooner; market birds are found ready without special feeding.

In former years I have often shown my birds at the fall and winter shows, always being successful in winning many of the best prizes offered. Of late years, my trade has taken all the choice specimens I could spare, after retaining my breeders. Birds, either bred and raised by me, or from eggs from my birds, compete in many shows the country over and I do not care to show against my customers.

Moreover, my time, during the show season, is nearly all taken up as poultry judge. In my absence competent men are in charge who attend promptly to my customers.

We sell good breeding cockerels from $3 to $10 each; hens and pullets, $2 to $10 each. Exhibition birds at prices according to their merits.

Our birds are bred by a double mating system, as we can get them nearer the standard requirements in this way. However, we do not use either extremely light or very dark-colored birds, but strive to retain a medium and distinct barred plumage in both sexes.

bition cockerels of standard color, nice shape, bay eyes, and low, even serrated combs. Hens in A and pullets and hens in C.

Pens H and P are composed of hens and pullets of standard color and the choice of all the females that I have on the farm. H pen is all hens, mated to the best pullet-bred cockerel I have. P pen is all pullets mated to a yearling cock, one of the best breeding birds I ever owned. He is especially strong in shape, color of skin, breast, and has a most excellent yellow leg. I have also a tested breeding cock at the head of my C pen, and an unusually fine cockerel heads my A pen.

Pen S is a special mating for pullets, with an eye to the practical qualities as well. The pullets in this pen are an exceptionally even lot. I still have the large cock bird (weight 10½ pounds as cockerel), that I used here last season, and shall place him here again or a cockerel that I think will breed better, or first one and later on the other.

Eggs from these five matings: $3 per thirteen from each or all the pens; $5 per twenty-six from any two or all the pens; $7 per forty from any three or all the pens; $10 per sixty-five from all five pens, one sitting from each, if wanted.

Pens D and E contain my second selection of pullet bred hens and pullets respectively, mated right for best results.

Pens G and F are all hens and pullets respectively, of cockerel breeding ancestry. These four pens are good birds, but hardly equal to my first selection, when show birds are what you are looking after. They are just as pure bred, just as large and just as well cared for as the others.

IDEAL PLYMOUTH ROCK FEMALE
BRED BY AMERICAN PLYMOUTH ROCK CLUB,
CORVALLIS, ORE.

Eggs from these four pens, $1.50 per 13, any pen or pens; $5 per 52, any two or more pens, $10 per 130, from all four pens.

After selecting the birds for the above nine pens and culling my flocks of all inferior and low grade specimens, I have mated three other pens, from which I will sell single sittings at $1 per 15, or for incubators, by the 100 at $6.

The above prices include packing and a guaranty of safe delivery to you by express, buyer to pay express charges. We also guarantee a satisfactory hatch.

Death to Lice.

The existence of lice or vermin among poultry is one of the most frequent causes of ill success in this business. No one seems to know where these little pests come from, but the fact remains, they appear on hens and chickens of all sizes and under all conditions, unless something is done frequently to prevent.

Poultry keepers are not long in the business before they find this out, and soon learn to look upon lice as the greatest barrier to their success. It is hardly necessary to tell experienced fanciers this; they know it and accordingly use Death to Lice liberally. New fanciers or amateurs would be saved the annoyance and expense of learning this for themselves, by taking these precautions and fighting lice from the beginning of their poultry keeping.

Farmers, as well as fanciers, ought to keep their poultry free from lice. On the farm poultry has materially helped to pay many a mortgage and frequently is the best paying part of the establishment, money and time spent, considered. The eggs sent to market will often pay all the grocer's bills and, by proper management, the poultry yard is a source of steady income. If the poultry on the farm has been kept at a profit, when lousy, how much more profitable they would be when clean and comfortable.

If we knew that someone was robbing our hen roosts, night after night, while we slept, we would soon get after him with a gun, yet this is what lice are doing both night and day, and, unless we are doing all we can to eradicate them, we are losing money wantonly.

The farmer formerly did not worry about his fowls being lousy, so long as he picked up an egg now and then and they did not die too rapidly, but the progressive farmer is now taking up pure bred fowls, as well as other thoroughbred stock and is giving them more attention and better care than he did his cross bred and mongrels.

It does not pay to keep anything that is lousy. Lousy hens and chickens around farm buildings will often transmit vermin to the other animals. Lice will worry a horse until they kill or spoil him; he will rub and ruin his mane and tail; his hair will come off in patches, and he will grow thin in flesh, no matter what nor how much you feed him. A lousy cow will give but little milk, and like the horse will lose flesh until relieved of these tormenters. Sheep will harbor lice and ticks with inestimable injury to their fleece. A hog will fatten slowly while harboring vermin.

Death to Lice Powder is adapted for use on all kinds of birds and animals, without injury to anything but vermin, while our supplementary remedies, Ointment, Special and Liquid are all best adapted for their specific purposes. We have numerous testimonials of each of the above remedies, excepting the Liquid, which is first introduced this year.

Our Death to Lice Powder was first placed on the market in 1883. No other louse remedy is better or more favorably known. No other louse remedy has more testimonials to its credit than ours, and no similar remedy can show better results.

These remedies are used continually by the majority of all the best breeders in the United States and Canada. Breeders who desire to show their birds in the pink of condition and to keep them so at all seasons of the year, know that lice and the best conditioned poultry are not found in the same coop. They know that blood is essential to the life of a chicken or fowl and that these little insects live on blood, no matter whether it is that of a choice thoroughbred or a second class mongrel, and stay on them and thrive until driven away or killed by remedies designed to exterminate them.

GEORGE H. NORTHUP,
Raceville, Washington Co., N. Y. - Box L.

There are several kinds of poultry vermin. One kind lives continually on the bodies of fowls and large chickens, and are found most frequently among the fluffy feathers around the thighs and vent. Another attacks sitting hens and worries and discomforts them until they are compelled to leave the nest.

It requires but a few moments to take each fowl from the roost, hold it over a shallow box and sprinkle a small amount of the powder among its fluffy feathers, before returning it to the roost again. The powder that falls into the receptacle can be used over and over again.

This powder is also invaluable for lice on horses, cattle, swine or plants, fleas or ticks on sheep, moths under carpets or in furs; for all these purposes, specific directions are given with each package.

We claim that for sitting hens this powder has no equal as a disinfectant and insecticide combined, keeping them clean, sweet and comfortable. It does not injure the eggs or little chickens should they hatch in it. It is not necessary to remove the hens from their nests to apply the powder; take a handful and sprinkle it in and around the nest and also among the fluffy feathers of the sitter, which she invariably ruffles up, when approached.

During the spring and summer months, when hatching and rearing chickens, it may be necessary to use larger quantities of Death to Lice. However, as these insects flourish at all seasons, it does not do to forget them in the fall and winter months.

In the manufacture of Death to Lice Powder, we aim to produce an article that will destroy lice without the slightest injury to animals or people using it. It should be used freely on and around dropping boards, after cleaning, and mixed with sawdust as a litter for nest boxes or chicken coops.

Birds, intended for exhibition purposes, should be frequently dusted with Death to Lice Powder. The majority of the best breeders and exhibitors use it regularly; it not only destroys the lice but it removes any grime or smutch from the feathers, without injuring or staining the finest plumage.

The key to successful showing of poultry is condition, and nothing will ruin a bird's condition faster than will lice. "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise," but if you are ignorant of the fact that your birds are lousy, it will not result in bliss of any kind.

Not infrequently, experienced exhibitors become careless in this, and do not look for lice until after their birds begin to droop and lose flesh rapidly in the show-room, and perhaps fail to win the coveted prizes. It requires but a moment to take birds out of their show coops and examine among the fluffy feathers, around the thighs and vent, and to know whether they are infested or not. It requires but a like amount of time to dust each one with Lambert's Death to Lice Powder, and then you know they are all right. It is safe to do this, even while in the show-room; the best time, however, is while preparing them for the fray. "Better late than never" is a good saying. "Better never late" is a better one.

Death to Lice Ointment is an old English remedy for lice on children's heads, and we have found it equally valuable for lice on the heads of little chickens. No matter how clean you keep the hen and brood or brooder and its occupants, these little peepers often become infested with head lice; these blood suckers fasten themselves on a chick's head and neck as if they grew there, and will stay as long as there is any life in their victim. These little pests are often mistaken for pin feathers and multitudes of youngsters die every spring and summer, while their owners are getting their costly lessons of experience. It is best to take a lantern and examine the broods every few nights and apply this remedy before the lice get a foothold. A little will suffice, yet this little will make a big difference in the mortality of your chickens. It is also frequently used for scaly shanks on fowls.

Death to Lice Special is prepared to add to the original "Powder," when used for fleas on cats or dogs or for moths under carpets and in furs, but is too penetrating to use on fowls or chickens; added to whitewash, it makes this more effective in its purifying and cleansing qualities. It can also be dissolved in coal oil or kerosene and used as a liquid louse paint or mite killer, the advantage being that it can be sent by mail and you can mix as wanted for use.

To meet the demand for a prepared liquid mite killer, we are putting on the market, for the first time this season, a Death to Lice Liquid, ready for immediate use, and those who desire a liquid for mites or spider lice in their henneries, can buy this remedy, feeling assured that, along the line with our other remedies, it is sold with a guarantee.

This liquid is non-poisonous and can be used with safety around stables, barns, out houses, sinks and drains as a disinfectant. For the above purposes liquid should be diluted with water—150 parts water to one part liquid.

It also makes an excellent sheep dip or wash for all kinds of animals. One gallon of the liquid makes from 50 to 100 gallons suitable for this purpose and for spraying fruit trees, bushes, etc. Directions accompany each can.

How Best To Set A Hen

During the winter and early spring, sitting hens are often desired by those who depend upon the natural methods of incubation. The best way to cause hens to become broody is to make them lay as well as possible. At the end of their litters some of them will take to the nest and, with proper treatment, will do maternal duty as well in January as in June. There's an Oriental proverb: "The proper time to set a hen is when she wants to sit." It is surely improper to try to make them sit until they want to.

When a hen becomes broody and you wish her to incubate, let her remain on the laying nest for three or four days until she gets well settled down to business. Prepare the nest in a box, similar to that illustrated, or in an empty barrel, laid down; put in a shovelful of dry earth, and shape the nest like a dish. On this, place an inch or more of bruised straw or soft hay, and sprinkle well with Lambert's Death to Lice Powder.

Now put in the eggs or some inferior ones as a decoy. Get the hen just before or after dark and put her on the nest as gently as possible, covering up the opening with a screen, a piece of bagging or boards, and keep her confined there until the next afternoon, about sunset, when she is allowed to come off for food, (principally whole corn), grit and water.

If she returns to the nest of her own accord promptly, she need not be confined again until just before hatching. If she does not return, put her there again and repeat the operation every evening until she learns what is wanted of her and comes off only as often as nature demands. If the eggs become soiled, wash them with warm water, and at the same time put clean hay or straw at the bottom of the nest.

Dust thoroughly once each week with Lambert's Death to Lice Powder. It is not necessary to remove the hen from the nest to do this. Sprinkle it well among her feathers with your hand as she ruffles them up when approached. Don't be afraid of hurting the eggs in any way with this remedy as it kills nothing but bad smells and insects.

A record card tacked on the side of the box or somewhere near the nest, with date when set, when due, and marks for the chicks when hatched will be of assistance to you all through the hatching season, and these marks here referred to, if made when the chicks are taken from the nest, will enable you to tell just what mating a chicken is from at any age, and guide you when mating up the birds for a succeeding season's breeding.

PARTRIDGE WYANDOTTES.

This comparatively new candidate for favor in the Wyandotte family has the beautifully pencilled plumage of the Partridge Cochin, with the shape, comb, and clean yellow legs of the Wyandotte. It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful fowl than the Partridge Wyandotte. We have spared no expense to have the best in this variety. My birds hold an unbroken record of first premiums this season. At Boston they won 9 regular and 5 special premiums. At New York, 4 regular and two special premiums on 4 entries. Eggs, $3.00 for 15.

My White, Golden and Buff Wyandottes are the best that money can buy. I have spared no expense to have the best. They are strictly up to date, and have won 75 first premiums this season in strong competition.

Buff Rocks.—My Buffs are buff to the skin, neat low combs, the proper Rock shape, and that even buff surface color that is so much desired. They have won 21 first premiums this season. At Boston, won 1st on cock, 2d on hen and 2d on pen. At New York, 3d on hen, 22 hens in competition.

R. I. Reds.—The coming utility fowl of the age. They are extremely handsome, great winter layers, and are hardy and vigorous. There is no fowl that compares with the Reds for the farmer, as the chickens can be raised with so little care. I have both single and rose comb. My birds have won 15 first and 12 second premiums this season. At Boston, won six premiums on six entries. At New York, on Rose Combs, won 1st on cock, 2d on hen, and 5th on pullet. On Single Combs, won 2d on hen, 4th on cock, and 4th on cockerel.

I also breed prize winners in Barred Rocks, Buff Leghorns (1st cockerel at Boston, 1901), Black Spanish, Blue Andalusians, Light, Dark and White Brahmas, Black, Columbian, Silver and Blue Wyandottes, Black Leghorns, Anconas and Buff Orpingtons.

..Sprayers and Spraying..

In no other branch of the manufacture of agricultural implements has there been greater improvement during the past two years than in those for applying insecticides, both in the liquid and powder form. With these tools the same amount of insecticide can be made to do much more and better work. We are now making the Death to Lice Powder so fine that it can be used in any of the powder sprayers, guns or a bellows. These improved sprayers will force the fine dust where it is desired, without handling the birds themselves. This instrument is also just the thing to apply the powder to house, garden or vegetable plants, potato vines for beetles, tomato and cabbage plants, currant and gooseberry bushes for worms, and to all shrubs and flowering plant for insects. In fact, this sprayer can be used for applying the powder to anything and anywhere that is lousy; it will not only save labor, but will prevent an unnecessary waste of powder.

We also offer a liquid sprayer which can be used for applying the Death to Lice Liquid, making from it a continuous mist or fog, which will cover the entire wood work of the interior of a hen house in a very few minutes, and much quicker than with a brush. It can be used by stock breeders for applying the Death to Lice Liquid (diluted) as a fly remover from cattle and other animals and lice killer for all kinds of stock and hogs. Nurserymen and fruit growers need something of this kind to spray fruit trees to prevent the San Jose Scale and other fungous diseases. This is one of the most effective sprayers we ever saw and we have taken the agency for them because they were such. No matter what you want to spray we can furnish you with a suitable sprayer.

Compressed Air Powder Sprayer for forcing the powder into a fowl's feathers while on the roost; for applying powder to vines and bushes, etc., etc., fitted with a tin pump, 1 qt. Glass Jar, $1.25. With brass pump and brass or copper screw cap, $1.60. Express paid, 75c. extra.

Compressed Air Mist or Liquid Sprayers for applying the Liquid Death to Lice (diluted) to the interior of hen houses, stables, dog kennels, pig pens, etc., etc., with tin pump, and Glass Jar, $1.00 or with brass pump, $1.50. Express paid, 60c. extra.

A Combination Hand Sprayer that can be used for any kind of a liquid solution or powder, made on the same principle as the liquid sprayer, 1 qt. Glass Jar, fitted with brass or copper pump and brass and copper screw cap, $2.00. Express paid, 50c. extra.

When shipping any of our insecticides by freight, these sprayers can usually be packed with them without additional cost for transportation. Address all orders to Isaac C. Hall, Fall River.

"Death to Lice" is again advertised in our business columns, and any reader troubled with these pests will find it one of the best remedies in the market. One of the principal things about Lambert's "Death to Lice" is that it holds its strength, and while it kills the insects it has no bad effect on the smallest youngster. If this powder is used freely in the nest pan and around the loft during the breeding season, pigeon fanciers need have no fear of lice. We have found Lambert's "Death to Lice" ointment also a good thing for pigeon fanciers, most of whom are troubled more or less with feather lice. While they may not be of any particular harm they certainly do no good, and a little of this ointment spread lightly on the neck feathers, removes the feather lice immediately and they don't come back.—The Pigeon News, Boston, Sept. 1, 1900.

REMEDIES are now on sale in nearly every section of the country. We will, upon application, mail you the name of the agent nearest you. We transfer orders for the 48 and 100-oz. sizes to agency nearest you, when we can save you time or money by so doing. Otherwise, these packages, which retail at 50c. and $1.00, respectively, are delivered to your Express Company (not office) upon receipt of price.

Dealers can sell all sizes of packages at regular rates, no matter where they are located. We have jobbers, North, South, East and West, who keep a supply in stock for the wholesale trade. If your dealer does not sell it, send me his address and I will endeavor to get him to do so.
